stomach last fall upon his return from a pleasure trip to Egypt. He had recently disposed of his properties in Massachusetts with a view to locating in Virginia. He was a graduate of Yale and of Harvard law school, and was 72 years old.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 13.—Daniel J. Chamberlain was born in West Brookfield, Mass., in 1834, and graduated from Yale and the Harvard Law School. Joining the army as a lieutenant of a negro cavalry troop, he saw service in several States, and at the end of hostilities was captain. He came to South Carolina in 1866 as a planter, but soon gave his attention to politics, becoming Attorney-General. In 1875 he was elected Governor by the Republicans.

While Governor, Chamberlain made an earnest effort to give a decent, orderly government, tending his efforts to prevent corrupt practices by officers. In 1876 he refused to issue commissions to two judges who had been elected by the Legislature and who were considered corrupt and unfit for the bench. For this action he was publicly thanked by the executive of Charleston. This and other official acts won for him the regard of many leading Democrats, and when the campaign of 1876 was approaching a strong move was made to have the whites support Chamberlain for Governor, believing in his best effort for reformation of conditions.

This had the support of the moderator, but the convention decided upon a Democratic candidate, General Wade Hampton being elected to bear the standard. Hampton was elected, but Chamberlain refused to recognize the election and with the aid of Federal bayonets held the executive mansion. For a period there were two governments in the State, Hampton heading one and Chamberlain the other.

If Your Horse Could Talk

What do you think he would say? More oats? More corn? NO. He would ask you to hold up on them for a while, at least, and give him a change.

Grain is germinating at this season of the year—i. e., sprouting—wants to grow.

Now, when grain wants to grow it absorbs the moisture from the atmosphere and becomes wet, soggy and sour, and when fed in this condition it causes colic, indigestion and various other ills.

Your horse knows this, but can't tell you so; you find it out when too late—often requires a doctor—sometimes the "dead wagon."

Why not avoid the risk? It's easy with Mueller's Molasses Grains.

It contains no raw grain; it is cooked—can't germinate; therefore, can't colic.

It is also very nutritious and very palatable. Your horse will not have to talk to show his appreciation. Just try him. Same way with the cow.

It is better than insurance—it saves the horse. Ask any of the thousands that are now using it.

Your dealer has it; if he hasn't, he can get it from
